HOME OFFICE SAFETY

Home Office Fires
Every year, hundreds of home offices are impacted by fire. Many accidents could have been avoided had they employed appropriate preparatory measures. All home offices should be equipped with a fire extinguisher and functioning smoke detectors that are tested monthly.

First Aid
Having a first aid kit is the best way to prepare for office accidents. These kits include everything necessary to provide temporary remedy until paramedics arrive in the event of a home office accident.

Cord Clutter
A common fire hazard shared by home and office workers is found in cord clutter. It can be tempting to simply hide this mess under a rug or piece of furniture, but the fire hazard posed does not disappear as easily. Use cord containing devices that are made to organize the clutter in a safe manner.
